

The growing use of the Internet in community planning has created enormous opportunities to evident “digital divide” (the economic and social inequality with regards to access to and use of ICT) was identified between First Nations and other communities in Canada, providing further constraints to the Indigenous planning process.

✓