mid-1970s, coupled with booming resource prices for potash and oil, brought on considerable optimism. Land prices climbed, the population stabilized, and schools, universities and new public enterprises were built. All of this happened years ago.

It is significant that this Conference is being held here in the capital of Saskatchewan. Conferences of First Ministers have almost always been held in Ottawa in the past. I firmly believe that, in recognition of our regional diversity, major federal-provincial meetings should not be held only in the Nation's Capital.¹¹

He echoed Devine as he described a new era of federal-provincial relations.

By the Fall of 1924 the government was well into the fifth year of its term.
